Ejercicio 5.- Write about 150 to 200 words on the following topic. "Divorce rates in Spain have increased in the last few years. Why do you think this is so?" Justify your answer (Puntuación máxima: 3 puntos)

Solución:

Until a few years ago, divorce was badly seen by society. Spain has been a very conservative country, and in many ways, it still being, so breaking the traditional structure of a family was not considered the best way to solve problems.

However, this mindset is changing at this moment, and it's currently accepted that if you are not happy in your marriage, you can get divorce. Even laws and the government are increasingly in favor of these kind of decisions.

Not all the cases are the same and many factors, such as children, need to be considered. But today, a variety of resources and solutions are envisaged, so that families who decided to divorce can carry it out.

It is for these reasons why I consider that the number of divorces has increased in Spain in last few years. The facilities and response of society have helped divorces to take place in a less traumatic and simple way.
